Private School Voucher Programs Disempower Parents
IDRA Testimony against HB 4807, submitted by Chloe Latham Sikes, Ph.D., to the Texas House Public Education Committee, April 11, 2023

Dear Chair Buckley and Honorable Members of the Committee:

My name is Chloe Latham Sikes, Ph.D., and I am the deputy director of policy at IDRA, an independent, non-partisan non-profit committed to achieving equal educational opportunity for every child through strong public schools that prepare all students to access and succeed in college.

IDRA opposes HB 4807, and any other legislative proposals that divert public school funds for private use, particularly without any public transparency or accountability. HB 4807 takes the state farther away from the goals of fair school funding and parent and community accountability over education quality.

HB 4807 Uses Public Money for Private Purposes with No Fiscal Accountability
Texas public schools serve all students as part of the state’s constitutional obligation to provide an efficient public education system. HB 4807 creates a separate, inefficient system of publicly-funded educational assistance organizations.

The education savings account (ESA) program would funnel about $10,000 per participant to certified educational assistance organizations (CEAO). However, the bill lacks any financial reporting or academic accountability requirements. Texas public schools are rated according to both fiscal accountability (FIRST) and academic accountability (A-F accountability system). While these accountability systems do not always account for all the indicators to measure student achievement and school performance, they do offer the public a way to gather open, transparent information about campus and district performance.

Research shows that ESA and similar voucher programs in other states have led to fiscal mismanagement, fraud and increasing state expense at the cost of public school funding (Abrams & Koutsavlis, 2023). Just five years after Arizona began its private school voucher program, the state found fiscal mismanagement among program participants (Davenport, 2016). In addition, while some comparable programs contain a cap or limit, they often balloon to consume a large portion of state education funding and decrease the public education funding for students in the public school system. For instance, in Florida, similar private school voucher programs now consume 10% of the state’s public education funding (Abrams & Koutsavlis, 2023).

HB 4807 Disempowers Parents with No Data and No Reports on Their Students’ Educational Opportunities applying for the ESA program that they waive their students’ federal and state protections under federal disability laws. In private school voucher programs, students with disabilities can be denied services according to their needs and can experience higher rates of disciplinary and behavioral referrals. However, data on these incidents is scarce due to the lack of reporting, leaving parents in the dark and excluding students from what are protected educational environments in public schools (NCD, 2018).

In addition, a 2020 study found that private school voucher programs across 29 states rarely require transparent reporting on student achievement or graduation rates or information as basic as teachers’ education qualifications. Most of the programs allowed private schools to discriminate against students’ religious and gender identities for admission. Only five states of the 29 required that students with disabilities be admitted to private schools benefitting from the voucher programs.

Overall, the programs obscured transparency on school and student performance, reduced accountability for meeting students’ needs, and permitted discrimination from students’ accessing the private education touted by the programs. Private school vouchers disempower students and parents from accessing high-quality education.
