Dear Chairman Creighton and Honorable Members of the Senate Education Committee:

My name is Rebekah Skelton, and I am testifying against Senate Bill 1 on behalf of the Texas Legislative Education Equity Coalition (TLEEC), a collaborative of 30 organizations and individuals with the mission to improve the quality of public education for all children, with a focus on racial equity. We advocate at the local, state, and national levels for high-quality teaching, curriculum and instructional practices and for bilingual education for emergent bilingual students, as well as fair funding and enhanced college access and success.

Our testimony today focuses on our deep concerns regarding SB 1, which would establish an education savings account (ESA) program in Texas.

TLEEC strongly opposes legislation that takes public money away from public schools under the guise of "parent empowerment." In the proposed voucher plan, Texas families will be left with fewer choices, poorly funded public schools, and a diminished public education system dedicated to serving all students, including those with the greatest needs.

Funding Education Savings Accounts Means Funding Discrimination Against Students

If SB 1 becomes state law, public schools stand to lose significant state and local funding, which will be diverted to unaccountable private institutions. Children are much more vulnerable to discrimination in private schools because they are not required to serve all students equally. Students with disabilities, in special education, bilingual education, or of diverse religious and gender identities could all be denied admission and educational services (Abrams & Koutsavis, 2023). In this case, it is not the parents’ choice, it is the schools’ choice. Public money should not be used to fund discrimination against students.

ESAs Divert Scarce Resources to Institutions Lacking Transparency and Accountability

Education savings accounts also lead to serious accountability issues. Private schools would not be required to disclose to parents and the public how they operate or how they manage their finances. They are not required to administer the STAAR and are not rated by Texas’ A-F accountability system.

Our public schools already have great needs without losing more of their scarce resources to these unaccountable institutions. Any plan to divert public money to private schools would reduce the services public schools can provide and make it harder to keep the teachers we need employed. Teachers’ salaries are lagging behind inflation and leave many juggling multiple side jobs to make ends meet. Bilingual and special education programs are grossly underfunded and facing 30-year teacher shortages (Cross, 2017). Our basic allotment currently ranks in the bottom 15 states in the nation (The Education Trust, 2023), and Texas ranks 41st in the nation for per-pupil funding (Hanson, 2023). Our attention should be focused on closing these gaps, not putting more money into the hands of the privileged few.

We do not need to look far to see how voucher plans are playing out in other states. In Arizona, the vast majority of families applying for vouchers already enroll students in private schools, meaning the vouchers act as a subsidy to privileged families who can already afford private schools (Fischer, 2022). And even after decades of voucher systems in effect, researchers have found there is no evidence that they significantly increase student achievement (Spector, 2017).

Recommendations

We urge the legislature to strengthen our public schools by increasing the basic allotment and keeping public money in public schools. Research has shown that school funding is the most important factor when it comes to providing children with a high-quality education (Latham Sikes, 2022). Any effort to divert public funds to private schools is not the answer. Giving private schools an advantage at the expense of public schools is contradictory to our responsibility to educate all Texas students and would exacerbate problems like school segregation and disparities in the quality of education students receive.

Our children are counting on us to give them the education they deserve. Keep public money in public schools.
